Reverse Garbage Queensland's WornOUT Exhibition Returns to the Runway

Garments handmade by 47 ethical creatives from Brisbane and beyond will take the runway at Reverse Garbage Queensland's (RGQ) WornOUT? 2022 Exhibition on Saturday the 5th of November at The Old Museum, Bowen Hills.

RGQ's WornOUT? Exhibition had a three-year hiatus due to the impacts of COVID on RGQ's day-to-day business. Being able to bring the show back to Brisbane is a significant achievement for this home-grown cooperative.

"As a grassroots organisation, we work directly with business and industry to divert thousands of tons of valuable materials from South East Queensland's waste streams" explained Bill Ennals, WornOUT 2022 Project Coordinator.

"WornOUT is an opportunity to show Brisbane what our community of creatives can do with these materials", he added.

The exhibition will showcase the works of 36 creatives from refashion and wearable art, as well as 11 builders as a part of the night's Upcycled Cosplay Challenge.

The youngest designer to showcase in this year's show is 13-year old Chris Coombe, an aspiring artist and avid environmentalist, who will be looking to repurpose blankets in their submission to the Wearable Art category.

"Age is no barrier", said Sadia Bouzegane, Designer Liason, "the level of skill displayed in Chris' submission proves that and we can't wait to see their garment take the runway".

Chris will be joined by leaders in the slow fashion community such as Kimbra Lou, Maria Nelson Molloy and NZ-based exhibitor Mayhalla Howells.

Returning to WornOUT as the exhibition's ambassador for Refashion and Wearable Art is Jane Milburn of Textile Beat – 2019 Churchill Fellow, Slow Clothing author and sustainability consultant.

WornOUT? 2022 is a ticketed event that is open to all ages and will take place on Saturday the 5th of November from 7pm to 10pm at The Old Museum, Bowen Hills.
